Double Glazing

High performance glass to give you maximum comfort to your environment.

Glass used in double glazing window for thermal insulation is known as Low E, or low-emissivity glass. It has a transparent metallic coating that works in two ways to economise heating energy. The dual action coating reflects cool back into the room, whilst allowing light from the sun to pass through.

Noise pollution is a serious issue, particularly when living in areas with high levels of traffic. Too much noise can be damaging to health (increased stress, disrupted sleep). Ordinary glass used in typical windows and doors does little to keep out unwanted noise.

Glass options and different solutions available.

- Window Frame - casement style performance windows provide a tighter seal against the frame, therefore reducing noise transmission compare to ordinary sliding window.
- Air Gaps - seal in all gaps in and around window frames, wall and ceiling vents.
- Glass Thickness - the greater the glass thickness the better the noise reduction.
- Mismatched Glass Thickness - offer dampening effect and provides better sound reduction over the same thickness monolithic glass.
- Laminated Glass - provides good acoustic performance compared to ordinary glass.
- Double Glazing Glass - has an air gap to prevent sound frequencies from vibrating from one pane of glass to the other.
- Spacer System - a wide air space can prevent noise entering your home.
